To Whom It May Concern:

Recently, Syracuse University's Byrd Library, with an address at 222 Waverly Avenue, Syracuse, learned that one of its computers may have been inadvertently exposed to internet users. The computer contained the names and social security numbers of four individuals. The University is currently notifying these individuals pursuant to General Business Law § 889-aa.

The University is sending the attached notice to affected individuals as the necessary data is recovered and the scope of the breach is assessed.

Please contact me if you have any further questions.

Very truly yours,

BOND, SCHOENECK & KING, PLLC

Re: Computer security breach at Byrd Library

Dear [name here]:

Byrd Library has reason to believe that the security of some of its computerized records may have been breached recently. As a result, an unauthorized individual may have gained access to certain private information. The private information may have included your name and social security number.

We are providing this information to you so that you may take appropriate measures to protect your financial information.

We apologize for any inconvenience that this may have caused you.

Sincerely,
